

Different World

Old man what do you leave, are you proud of what you see?
As the sun still rise and as time goes by, Is it still things left to find?
As you step out to the light from the darkness of the night
Do you count each day as a blessed day or what's going through your mind?

Do you reflect at all, about the days gone by?
What about the plans you had, did they turn out alright?

*The world today's a different world from the world where you grew up
But still you carry on and give it all you got
It makes me wonder if you enjoy what it 's become?
Or will you be glad when it is done?*

Old man I do believe, that you still got things to see
If you keep your fire and your open mind but I now one day it's through
Oh and when that day will come I hope you really know
That all you've done both right and wrong, has shaped the ones you know

I see an empty place where no one is anymore
But all the memories will make you live on more

*The world today's a different world from the world where you grew up
But still you carry on and give it all you got
You are a part of me that I never will give up
So keep your fire going on*
