

In times of sadness

Now and then I wonder where it all began?
What did ignite the spark that turned it upside down?
Was it just a rumour or something that was true?
Was it something that we could have prevent?
Somewhere on the ocean a boat is sailing on to a destination that is still unknown
And like that boat we're sailing on the sea of life.
Hope your boat did reach the shore.

I did once believe that day would follow night
Not that night could go on and take over the light
But like in nature when the moon eclipse the sun
Our mind and thoughts are easily corrupted by the night
The boat we're sailing on can take a different path
And go through rain and Thunder and get lost into the night
And in the worst of nightmares the boat will fall apart
And we sink into the sea.

Now and then I wonder where it all began?
And did you ever wonder "oh what have I done?"
We must live and learn but sometimes it's so hard
But lift your head and try to breath even in the dark.
But in times of sadness it's easy to believe
That this is all there is and there wount be nothing else

But try to remember that the moon will go away
And the light will come again.
